Chaplaincy to be celebrated

The 30th anniversary of the Pa. Council of Churches summer campground chaplaincy will be celebrated on Sunday, July 8, 1990 at the Gifford Pinchot State Park. Chaplain Brian Wilkinson will bring the homage at the 9:30 a.m. service. Former chaplains have been invited to attend, or to send messages if they cannot be present. A children's service will be provided for children ages 3-12, under the leadership of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Firestone from the Weigamuth Church of the Brethren.

This will be one of 55 informal interdenominational services. Persons from many church backgrounds will join together in worship this weekend.

The campground chaplaincy program has expanded from a pilot project at Cowan's Gap State Park in 1960. The program developed in response to camper requests for opportunities to worship and reflect on life while they vacation in state park campgrounds. The Pa. Council of Churches offers a program under "Special Activities Agreement" with the Bureau of State Parks. The program has grown to keep pace with the expansion of the Commonwealth's wonderful park system and the changing camper population over the past three decades.

Summer chaplaincy is a unique combination of the churches outreach and caring for all persons. Those who serve as chaplains receive training in listening skills, respect for religious diversity, and the ability to plan and share inspiring, informal worship in the great outdoors.

The campground program at Gifford Pinchot State Park is made possible through an annual grant from the So. Pa. District Church of the Brethren and camper offerings.

The chairman of the local committee is Rosemary Firestone. Other committee members include: Rev. Charles Dorsey, Rev. Warren Eshbach, Dale Fogelsanger, Mitch Dickerson, Jesse Taylor, Inez Long, Eugene and Selma Kapp, and Chaplain Brian Wilkinson.

Ronca reappointed

Harrisburg lawyer James R. Ronca has been reappointed chairman of the Pennsylvania Bar Association Medico-Legal Committee.

The appointment was announced by PBA President John A. Carpenter of Sunbury. The committee's charge is to disseminate information to foster better understanding of the mutual interests and problems of the medical and legal professions.

Ronca was also re-elected vice chairman of the PBA Civil Litigation Section by the section's membership. The section studies the practical working of the law relating to all forms of insurance, suretyship law and negligence law.

A partner in the firm of Schmidt and Ronca P.C., Ronca is president-elect of the Pennsylvania Trial Lawyers Association. He is member of the executive committee of Lawyers for Consumer Rights.

Ronca, a graduate of Lehigh University and the Dickinson School of Law, is a part chairman of the Central Pennsylvania March of Dimes. He is a member of the Sierra Club and the tri-county chapter of Mothers Against Drunk Driving.

He and his wife, Patricia, live in Dillsburg. They have two children.

Bike awards

Top Fund-raisers in the County-wide Bike Hike were honored at an awards ceremony on May 31 at Camp Pennwood. Nine area Education Associations sponsored rides to raise over $40,000 to benefit the programs and services of the Association for Retarded Citizens (ARC).

Amongst those receiving awards are Chrystal Deahner of the Dillsburg Lions Club.

Ms. Fulton emphasized that the ARC deeply appreciates the time and energy each Education Association, Bike Hike Coordinators, and individual riders put into the fundraising for Bike Hike. "The dollars raised by these youngsters help to support the services of the ARC including Camp Pennwood, a summer camp program, Penn Employment, a supported work program; After School, a day care program; Let's Play to Grow, a family oriented program for pre-school; and the Client and Family Services Program.

Free information

A free informational program on how to lose weight and keep it off will be held Wednesday, July 11th at 5:30 p.m. at the Trindle Rehab Medicine Center, Mechanicsburg.

This comprehensive medically supervised program is for women who are 30 pounds overweight and men who need to lose 50 pounds or more. This represents approximately 26% of adult Americans.

Body Shop has summer openings

The Body Shop, a diet and exercise program for youth ages 8 to 18, has openings for its summer session at Penn State's University Hospital at The Milton S. Hershey Medical Center.

The Pediatric Weight Management Program conducts the meetings where young people gather weekly to learn weight control skills with a registered dietitian, activity specialist, and personal growth leader.

The ten-week program will be held Wednesday evenings in the hospital dining room C-D of the cafeteria from July 11 through September 12. The initial meeting will be held from 6 p.m. to 8:30 p.m. All other classes will run from 6:30 p.m. to 8:30 p.m.

A dietitian will evaluate each young person's needs and program an individual eating goal, to help the participant maintain health and growth. The exercise program, designed by the activity specialist, is meant to improve agility and poise and increase activity.

Topics to be covered include going to parties and still losing fat; satisfying the after-school hungries; goal-setting for the changes you want; eating for energy; choosing food for the body you want and muscle toning and body shaping.

One parent is required to attend the weekly meetings, because parental cooperation and support in meal planning is especially important for this age group.

Following the ten-week program, students may continue to seek group support through informal, weekly meetings. These one-hour meetings are for all past Body Shop students.

For more information, or to register your child, call Colleen Gretcher, the Body Shop coordinator, in the pediatric surgery office at 531-8542.

Aquarium business expands into retail sales

by Mary Lou Bytef

The Tropic Reef on Hanover Street Extension will become one of the most exotic retail stores in Pennsylvania, co-owner Phil Walter predicts.

The unusual merchandise, the quality of the manufactured products, plus the sheer size of the 13,000 square feet retail area, is expected to draw an assortment of customers throughout Southcentral Pennsylvania.

The Tropic reef is a newly created division of Walter and Fogel Aquarium Supply, one of the largest aquarium stand manufacturers in the country.

According to Walter, the five-year-old manufacturing business has shipped over 60,000 units in the past year. At its busiest time, the company has employed 15-18 people, he says.

Featuring quality craftsmanship, the products range from a small 2'x4' stand for an economy 10-gallon tank, to an impressive, built-in wall system that holds up to a 450 gallon tank.

All the cabinets are built of solid hardwoods that are brought in by the truckload, Walter says.

The business also makes a highly effective, low-maintenance filtration system to fit its cabinets and to accommodate the tank space.

"It's actually a miniaturized septic system," Walter explains. "There are no water changes," he continues. "Just add some water regularly and change the carbon every three months."

In addition to the aquarium/terrarium systems, the Tropic Reef features exotic fish, reptiles, and animals. Tropic fish, an assortment of snakes and lizards, and a few rabbits currently are in stock.

In the future, customers will be able to buy anything from fancy goldfish to small sharks to stock their aquariums, Walter says.

To survive, tropical fish must live in heated tanks. In addition to heating units, The Tropic Reef will stock refrigerated systems to raise trout in the home, Walter says. That system will keep the water temperature from rising above 52 degrees F, he adds. In addition, the store has a permit from the State Fish and Game Commission to raise the trout, he also says.

All the creatures in the store will be here legally, he emphasizes. "We will abide by all state and federal controls," he exclaims.

"And there will be no poisonous snakes," he says emphatically.

For anyone who is not impressed by exotic fish and reptiles, bears and cougars may be put on display to draw customers, Walter adds.

Terry Fogel, the other co-owner of the Reef, is in charge of the land animals.

Fogel carefully removed a timid Ball Python from its cage as he explained the feeding process of the snake.

If the skin becomes loose, as it is with this snake, Fogel says, then its feeding time.

Feeding a python is not a job for anyone with a queasy digestive tract. Purina does not make "python chow".

If the snake has not eaten in a while, he may forget how to eat, Fogel explains. So, it is the master's duty to hand-feed the pet with a live rodent. Snakes convey a macho image, Fogel says. That's why many snake owners are male, he concludes.

However, women enjoy stroking the reptiles' skin, or at least admiring its beautiful patterns and texture, he adds.

Within the first month of the store's opening, Fogel says he has sold 10-12 snakes.

Lizards, which Fogel calls "snakes with legs," are popular in the store. Types in stock include iguanas, a small but nasty tokay gecch, and the crested basilisk. According to Fogel, the miniature basilisk is often magnified by movie makers to appear on film as dinosaurs.

In addition to the cold-blooded creatures, the Tropic Reef will be selling some conventional pets -- the cute, furry kind. Rabbits and kittens will come from local breeders. Although it will not have puppies in stock, Fogel says he will order them from very reliable kennels for his customers.

In keeping with the exotic tone of the business, the store will be selling those petite porkers that are a Hollywood rage. Although it will not stock the tiniest, 25-pound Vietnamese pigs, which sell for $30,000 in Hollywood, the Reef will sell the somewhat larger, yet less expensive Oriental Pigs, which weigh from 40-150 pounds.

In addition to The Tropic Reef, the aquarium and filtering systems manufactured in Dillsburg also are sold to distributors along the east coast from Maine to Florida; and as far west as Chicago and St. Louis, Walter says.

The aquarium supply business also employs individuals to service and install the systems.

Although The Tropic Reef is only a few months old, its products can be seen in a number of Dillsburg area homes, businesses and professional offices.

Brides can have name changed at no charge

Newly married women can have their names changed on Social Security records without charge according to Eileen Meckley, district manager of the York Social Security office.

Many newly married women continue to use their maiden names at work. Those who intend to use their married names, however, should report the change to Social Security and apply for a new card. A new card with the same number will be issued in about 2 weeks according to Mrs. Meckley.

You may notice advertisements in various publications that offer to have a bride's name changed for a fee. Brides may also be approached through the mail. The names are usually obtained from local marriage records.

What the advertisements do not say is that the bride will have to do the same thing for the firm offering the service as she would have had to do if she contacted Social Security directly. Moreover, Social Security does not charge for the service.

A bride who wants to change her name will need the original or a certified copy of her marriage certificate, showing both her old and new names. If foreign born, she must also present evidence of U.S. citizenship or current alien status.

Eight NHS students attend FFA Actvities Week

by Lynn Farner

Eight members of the Gifford Pinchot Chapter of the FFA attended State FFA Activities Week, June 12, 13 and 14, at Penn State University, State College.

Fr. Chad Conrad, So. Dave McCoy Jr. Dan Cook, and Sr. Scott Beck all participated in the livestock judging contest. Fr. Michelle Anderson, Jr. Esther Doll, and Sr. Dana Chronister all participated in the horse judging contest. So. Lynn Farner served as the Chapter delegate.

Upon arrival at the University and after registering, our group attended our respective contest orientations.

Official activities at FFA week commenced with the evening General Session, run by the State Officers.

Each day's activities were brought to a close by a General Session, at which attendance by everyone was mandatory. Each evening's meeting held surprises.

Guest speakers included Dan Schroer National Vice-President, from Ohio and Erich Gayer, an FFA member and exchange student from Germany.

The State FFA chorus performed American folk favorites, and FFA talent was showcased by young singers, dancers and musicians.

The General Session of the 12th also included the Retiring address from State FFA president, Rebecca Sonnen. The evening ended with a dance, held in the sports complex. It was the only building on the campus large enough to hold the more than 1200 FFA members present.

The final day ended with the closing General Session. It featured the presentation of contest awards. The most exciting point of the morning, however, was finding out who the newly-elected State Officers are! The trip was certainly enjoyed by all who attended, including Mark McCullough, the FFA advisor. Yes, he survived unscathed!
